CONCLUSION

The developer faced challenges mainly at the beginning of the project since a lot had to be learned. This made it extremely difficult for the developer to move through with the development fast. From time to time, half-way through the development, the developer finally decided to use controls for the whole project, wherever input was collected except in searching since it was implemented before the discovery of controls and it was working well.

All in the entire project was a success and both the research and the development addressed the necessary issues and possibly will help eliminate the stated problems.

The developer appreciates the efforts of his friends, lecturers and supervisor who helped them in different ways throughout the project.
